The Hauntings of Castle Stuart

Scotland has many haunted castles, but perhaps the most chilling stories come from Castle Stuart in the Highlands. The castle was built in 1561 and has a frightening and bloody history. Here are two of its ghost stories.

The East Tower

In 1798, a storm blew the roof off the castle's East Tower. The Earl who lived there didn't have enough money to repair it so the tower was closed. Finally, in the 1930s, repairs started. One of the workmen started to knock a hole through the wall into the East Tower. At that moment, he heard a voice cry, 'No!' His heart started to beat faster, but he continued to work. Suddenly, something pushed him, and he fell backwards. He ran out of the building, but cold hands tried to pull him back. He got away, and never returned.

The 'Three Turret' room

An Earl who came to live in the castle was terrified by ghostly noises and screaming. He offered £20 to any man who would stay in the 'Three Turret' room. Four men accepted the challenge: a minister, a shoemaker, a church elder, and a local or 'Highlander', Rob Angus. The plan was that each man would spend a night in the room and then compare their experiences to see if the ghosts really existed. The minister, the shoemaker, and the church elder all tried to stay the night alone, but each one of them saw the large, angry, and terrifying ghost of a Highland man. Rob Angus was strong and never afraid of anything. The servant who locked the room was the last person to see him alive. The next morning, Rob's body was found on the ground outside the castle, the room was a mess – all the furniture was turned over, and the window was broken. No-one knows what really happened that night.
