FEMALE SIGN

*A British friend of yours is visiting Melbourne and sees a "female" traffic signal, which he doesn't understand. He texts you about it including a photo he's taken. Use your own words and the piece of news below to send him an audio message explaining the initiative. Add information, if you have any, about similar campaigns in your country.

FEMINISM AT ITS WORST?

Melbourne has installed "female" traffic signals as part of a gender equality campaign one day before International Women's Day.

Fiona Richardson, Minister for Women, backed the move, saying it would make public space more inclusive of women. "There are many small - but symbolically significant - ways that women are excluded from public space," she said in a statement.
