Should everyone become vegetarian?

With ethical diets on the increase among people, we want to know about what you eat and why it matters politically

In our “Virgin vegan” series, we listen to what people and first-time voters have to say about the issues that matter most to them. With increasing numbers of citizens supporting the Green party and environmental causes, we want to ask you about your attitude towards meat. Is the consumption of meat sustainable in the long-term? Is it healthy? Should governments pass laws enforcing meat consumption regulations?

‘Everyone should cut down on meat – western meat-eating levels are unsustainable’

I’m 19 and a philosophy student at University College London (UCL). I am a vegan and my decision was an ethical one. I wanted to avoid killing animals just because I wanted – rather than needed – to eat them. I moved from being vegetarian to vegan as I realised that vegetarianism does little in terms of animal rights - people tend to up their dairy intake as vegetarians, and the dairy industry is filled with cruelty. It’s hard to justify the meat and dairy industries as they currently stand, because the animals are treated badly, and unless you have the money, it’s hard to obtain ethically sourced meat. Everyone should cut down on their meat consumption, as current western meat-eating levels are at an unsustainable level.      Adapted from: <https://www.theguardian.com/education/2015/apr/10/should-everyone-become-vegetarian>
