TOPIC: TOURISM

Selfie-tourism

You read the following text in a news article:

Technology has changed the way we travel. Smartphones, travellers' comments and photos, search engines and algorithms can all inspire and empower us to plan complex journeys all over the globe within minutes.

For many people, mobile phones have become their external brain when on the road. These so-called "selfie-gaze" tourists see and experience the destination largely through their cameras and the comments and feedback they receive on their posts. In this sense, their satisfaction does not depend on the quality of the destination and experience, but on how well they manage impressions and attract "likes" and positive comments.

TOPIC: TRANSPORT
Electric scooters

You read the following text in a news article:

As eco as they can be, electric scooters turn out to be more of a problem than convenience on the streets of Madrid and other major Spanish cities. The scheme is the same as with the rentable electric cars or bicycles - you find it using an app, pay a fee, ride, and then park it at any location. That last part turns out to be causing troubles for pedestrians as scooters are being left on sidewalks or used without taking into consideration traffic rules.

Some viral videos show people racing with the vehicles causing problems for pedestrians.
