RESHMA SAUJANI AT SMITH COLLEGE'S 2023
COMMENCEMENT

'Imposter Syndrome' is Modern-Day 'Bicycle Face'

In the 1890s, doctors discovered a peculiar [0] medical malady that supposedly threatened the health of women who cycled.

The speaker believes that the innovation of bicycles with two wheels of the same proportions symbolized a significant step towards [8] _____.

The purpose of 'bicycle face' was purely to [9] _____ women from using this way of transportation.

The bicycle enabled women from the political movement of the [10] _____ to gather and advocate for their rights.

As cycling gained popularity among women, they began to prefer different, more [11] _____ clothing, such as bloomers, that allowed for easier movement.

Many men viewed the rise of female cyclists as dangerous and [12] _____ to traditional societal structures and norms.

Ultimately, 'bicycle face' was not really an illness but a way to discourage women from continuing their progress and to make them stop [13] _____ altogether.

Just like 'bicycle face,' the idea of 'imposter syndrome' is also used to hold women back, and it is up to women themselves not to fall for the [14] _____.

The speaker thinks that 'imposter syndrome' was [15] _____ in misogynistic attitudes.

Similar to 'bicycle face', 'imposter syndrome' arose in response to women making strides forward. Yet, the [16] _____ this time was even more deceptive and harmful.

'Imposter syndrome' is unfairly based on the [17] _____ that when women have doubts about their abilities it is because they genuinely lack them.
