 Raizinman Platinum Member Original Poster	Monday at 12:24 PM I run a highly technical profitable company. I placed an ad looking for a new employee. A college graduate (BA) applied, age 23. He passed the drug test, driving test and appeared to be a really good candidate. We hired him and start his 3 to 4 months of training before he can even start a job. His first two months went very good, basically sitting and listening. In month 3 we start with some hands-on training. He basically forgot everything we taught him. We took him on a job and asked him to just assist and he was completely worthless. We spoke with him and he confided to us that he just wants a paycheck without having to do any real work. He told me that for the first two months he just let the information go by and did not pay any real attention. We explained that he cannot work here. He begged and begged for us to reconsider, but he still didn't understand why he can't work here. This is the second time this happened with someone in this age range. Are all 20 to 30 year olds like this? I would estimate that his best bet of employment would be fast food.

Some of the following posts were:

 highland145 Lifer	He's young. He made a mistake. GenX and I can remember when people were saying that all GenX were lazy, pot smoking punks. I'm sure that there are plenty of young people who would be exceptional workers.
 Red Squirrel No Lifer	All most millennials want is to be able to get the same life boomers had. Having a job, a house, and living comfortably. But this is hard to get now because everything costs way more. You are lucky to even get a decent paying job.
